Employe of C.I.A. 'Cover' Quit 2 Years Ago

By SYDNEY H. SCHANBERG Special to The New York Times

as a by-product of its inquiry for his role in the Watergate Mullen job.

SINGAPORE, July 5—A man who gave his name as Arthur H. Hochberg left Singapore hurriedly about two years ago, and has not been heard from since. He left in such a rush that he did not even tell his office landlord that he was pulling out and closing down his the such as the such as the such as the such as reprinted in this morning's straits Times, Singapore's main this morning's curity clearance."

As a by-product of its inquiry for his role in the Watergate Mullen job. She had not read the story Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the Senate report stain in this morning's new year she is curity clearance."

Also, the Senate report said the ordinary during the year she is morning the year she is that at the time of the break-in, she worked for Mr. Hochberg, into the role played by the break-in, was employed by the Mullen company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company in this morning's large about the Senate report said.

The apparent reason for Mr. that at the time of the break-in, was employed by the Mullen job.

She had not read the story about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and the Mullen Company at the time about the C.I.A. and berg had put a special lock on Mullen Company.

his private,inner office and the landlord had to bring in lock-

Senate committee came up with former C.I.A. agent who plead he left and was not merely the information about Mullen ed guilty and was convicted being transferred to another as a by-product of its inquiry for his role in the Watergate Mullen job.

his private, inner office and the landlord had to bring in locksmiths to open it after Mr. Hochberg vanished.

All of this would not be very unusual in Singapore, which is, after all, an international commercial center where foreign businessmen come and go in large numbers, except that a couple of days ago, a report by the minority staff of the Senate watergate committee revealed that the company Mr. Hochberg worked for has for many years been providing "cover" for Central Intelligence Agency operatives stationed abroad.

The company is Robert R. Mullen & Co., a Washington public relations concern. The English-language daily.

The apparent reason for Mr. Hochberg's sudden departure puzzled, as was the landlord, the report, was that a short but they were not angry, for he had been a congenial employer who had paid his rent landlord did have one small complaint, however—Mr. Hochberg had put a special lock on his private inner office and the landlord had to bring in the missing appress main curity clearance."

Also, the Senate report said to the senate report said to the singapore and another in Amsterdam were shown as routine but they were not angry, for the missing appress main curity clearance."

Also, the Senate report said to the singapore and another in Amsterdam were solves as 'overseas employes' of the Mullen Company.

She described her work as routine business correspondence about it and asked if she had ever noticed anything out of the ordinary during the year she she worked for Mr. Hochberg, she answered in the negative. She described her work as routine business correspondence about it and asked if she had ever noticed anything out of the ordinary during the year she she worked for Mr. Hochberg, she answered in the negative. She described her work as routine business correspondence about it and asked if she had ever noticed anything out of the ordinary during the year she she worked for Mr. Hochberg, she answered in the negative. She described her work as routine business correspondence about public relations matters. She recalled letters to some banking houses and to a cargo container company.

A Modern Office

A very limited picture of his activities here emerged to-day from conversations with his office landlord and one of his was in Suite 306 of the Cathay

She expressed puzzlement, not only over the haste of Mr. Hochberg's departure but also over the circumstances of the event—she said the Mullen Company wanted the office to remain open but that Mr. Hoch remain open, but that Mr. Hochberg's resignation forced the shut-down.

Closing Was Forced

"His to resign His decision to resign caused the company to close," she said. "It was not the company asking him to leave. Which we found odd, because the company did not want to close but it had to because he resigned." decision

A spokesman for the United States Embassy here, asked for comment, said: "We never have any comment on alleged C.I.A. activities."

The landlord of the Cathay The landlord of the Cathay Building, who earlier in the day had talked freely about Mr. Hochberg's advance rent payments and about the subsequent trouble with his office locks, and who had invited a newsman to phone him later for more information—became silent when the newsman called back. called back.

It could not be determined if Singapore or American au-thorities had spoken to him.