Public Reacts to Watergate News

By George Gallup

Princeton, N.J.

A majority of Americans — 53 per cent — now believe the mass media — newspapers, television and radio — are providing "too much" coverage of Watergate.

Four times as many in the current survey say "too much" as say "too little." Another three persons in ten (30 per cent) believe the coverage of Watergate to be "about right."

The proportion who believe Watergate coverage is excessive has increased from one year ago, when 44 per cent said the media were providing too much coverage, 12 per cent said too little and 36 per cent believed coverage to be "about right."

While the issue remains politically partisan, Democrats account for much of the change during the last 12 months.

In the earlier survey, conducted in June of 1973, 32 per cent of Democrats believed the media coverage of Watergate was "too much."

Among Republicans, the proportion saying the coverage of Watergate is "too much" has increased from 65 per cent a year ago to 75 per cent today. Among independents, the figure has increased from 43 to 51 per cent.

Views on news coverage depend to a considerable extent on how people view Watergate Those who believe Watergate is "just politics" and not a serious matter are far more inclined to say the media are devoting too much time and space to Watergate than are those who view it as a serious matter.

Even among those who regard Watergate as a serious matter, however, as many as one - third feel that there is currently too much coverage.

Here is the question asked:

"With regard to the Watergate affair, do you think the mass media — that is, newspapers, television and radio — have provided too
