Cox, Back in Professor's Role, Still Extols Virtues of Reason's

Mr. Cox seems to have made a studied attempt to run his life with the courtly, Yankee good humor and the slight eccentricites that make him such a distinctive campus figure.

Mr. Cox has his detractors in the classrooms at Harvard Law School, where he teaches labor, constitutional and administrative law.

"There's no question that he's in complete command of

Shovels Out Stables

He still drives a pickup truck to the law school. He still shovels out the stables of the family farm where his wife raises Morgan horses. He still gets panned in student reveiws of his teaching style. He still wears his nar row lapel, slope shouldersuits and buttondown shirts. And in a time of wide ties, fat bows or none at all, he still wears his skinny bow ties.

Above it all, there is the talk of fair play and civility that he dwelled on before he became special prosecutor and that he dwells on now. It is the theme of his public speeches.

For instance, in his Phi Beta Kappa oration at Harvard this spring, Mr. Cox compared the tactics of the sSenate Watergate committee to those of the late Senator Joseph R. McCarth in the 1950's.

The committee or its staff Tresident.

"There's no question that he's in complete command of the subject, but he's not a performer in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no question that subject, but he's not a performer in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no question that he's in complete command of the subject, but he's not a performer in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no question the subject, but he's not a performer in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no question the subject, but he's not a performer in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no former in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no former in the classroom," said one recent graduate near the top of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no of his class." There's no of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no of his class. "There's no of his class." There's no of his class. "There's no of his class." There's no of his class. "There

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., July 18
(AP)—Archibald Cox, the man hired and dismissed by President Nixon as special Watergate prosecutor, has eased back into his role as professor of law at Harvard.

Mr. Cox; a victim of what has come to be called the "Saturday Night Massacre" last October, spends his days now grading law papers and lecturing to his students, extolling the virtues of fairnensns a reason.

He gets lingering stares now when he pedals across campus on his bicycle. He tiredly insists that he cannot discuss Watergate. And he wonders, now, how he could have been the center of a hurricane of national controversy over a major Government shakeup.

Mr. Cox seems to have made

"leaks the result of incomplete investigation, gives out the accusatory inferences it draws from secret testimony and even releases proposed findings of guilt upon men under indictment," Mr. Cox is a liberal. But in his concern for his favorite virtues, he avoids some of the virtu

Mr. Cox has his detractors ministrative law.

"There's no question that he's in complete command of