Richard M. Nixon's son-inlaw, David Eisenhower, says the former President faces "very direct and very threatening" legal and financial problems as a private citizen.

"Right now they're working on two things: they're trying to make a book decision, and they're fighting a legal battle," said Eisenhower, who is married to Mr. Nixon's younger daughter, Julie.

he's not thinking about it now."

Recalling Mr. Nixon's last days in the White House, Eisenhower said the then-President told his family about the contents of the June 23 tapes on Friday, Aug. 2, three days before admitting publicly that he had attempted to thwart the FBI's Watergate investigation. "It was something he didn't want to talk about with his family," Eisen-hower said. "We sort of im-posed ourselves on him to posed ourselves on him to get to know the situation. He made the transcripts available to us."

Then in the privacy of their second-floor White House quarters, the family gathered to discuss the personal and political ramifications of those tapes.

Julie Eisenhower, who had actively and publicly defended her father, did not feel shocked, surprised, bitcial trouble." The possibility of a lucrative contract for a Nixon book looms as one solution to the money difficulties confronting the resigned President.

In a luncheon interview three weeks after Mr. Nixon surrendered the presidency, Eisenhower discussed the family's role in the decision to resign. He said Mr. Nixon told his family only reluc-tantly of the disclosure that finally forced him from office—the tape transcripts showing that he had withheld Watergate evidence.

He also said that Mr.

Nixon remains "a natural resource," and that it would be a good idea if he ran again for office.

"Obviously, it depends on people's view of him,' Eisen-hower said. "He's a young man. He's a natural resource. He's been defensive. . . . He's been bitter. He's been all the rest in the last year and a half. But in calmer times under different circumstances, the man has a heck of a lot to contribute. thing Mr. Nixon had "run by us in May of '73," shortly af-ter his closest aides, H. R. (Bob) Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, resigned in the wake of Watergate disclosures. When the resignation option was opened again this summer, "Some members of the family members of the family thought he ought to go on," Eisenhower said, "to narrow the bill of particulars and essentially to ... enable his-torians ... to decide if the President should be driven from office for allegedly, or at least proven to the satisfaction of Congress, having asquiesced in the nonprosecution of aides who covered up a little operation into the opposition's political head-quarters which is a practice that was fairly well estab-lished in Washington for a long time and that roome took all that seriously."

Fifteen years from now, Eisenhower said, "It's going to look pretty small, and there will be other grounds were the ones that made the issues unevadable."

In his own mind, Eisen-hower said, he views those who became entangled in Watergate "as not so much a gang of felons that were out to subvert the Constitution, but by and large people who walked into and indulged in accepted practices within the unwritten rules of executive D.C. which had developed over four years. .

"Maybe it was the personality of Richard Nixon that inspired it. But in either case, I don't think the individuals involved are on a par with Hermann Goering, Joseph Goebbels, Rudolf Hess.'

Eisenhower grimaced at his own mention of the Nazi henchmen. "It's just not the same thing," he said. "Someone's ox is going to get gored ... to check the unbridled expansion of exec-utive authority, and it utive authority, and it turned out to be ours. That's the way it goes."

Eisenhower said he does not know how Mr. Nixon feels now about Haldeman and Ehrlichman, the men many blame for the climate that led to the Watergate-related abuses.

"Look," he said, "they were efficient, dedicated public servants. You can't escape that. ... I think, in the context of time, they were not acting as evil men. They weren't henchmen of Stalin... they just weren't. They're paying for it ... We're not punishing evil, wicked men ... The government is making a point as to dential power in Washing ton ... It's a tough time for them individually. It's a treat this administration just as unkindly . . ."

On Wednesday, Aug. 7, af-ter five days of conferring individually with each mem-ber of his family and 24 hours before he would an-nounce his decision to the public, Mr. Nixon told his family he would resign. "Then he didn't want to hear any more about it," Eisenhower said. "So we all got together for dinner, and the topic was dropped."

By that time, Eisenhower said, "everyone made damn sure he wouldn't wake up some morning in San Cle-mente and say, 'I shouldn't have resigned.' He was ready to resign by the time it happened."

Reflecting on that decision, Eisenhower continued, "Watergate may have been motivated politically. I don't know. But it was a legal iswithin certain limits, you could go out and attempt to garner all the political support you wanted, but if you were losing the battle on the evidence, it was going to get you, unlike casualty fig-ures in Vietnam or rhetoric about the silent majority.

And the President, said Eisenhower, was losing on the evidence. "I see no question about it. I think that's why he resigned."

Asked whether he thinks Watergate Special Prosecu-tor Leon Jaworski should prosecute his father-in-law Eisenhower said tersely, "I'd rather not get into that at all ... I don't think I or any other member of my family should go running around making comments on the le-gal aspects of the thing."

Then he went on to say, "The legal system cracked the case. This is the thing you can never escape. How-ever political it was, the legal system cracked it ... The courts brought the ad-ministration down, not so much the Congress or anything else ... the courts
