Haldeman? Ehrlichman? Well, It's One of the Men

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—
Throughout the Watergate cover-up trial, lawyers for H. R. Haldeman and John D.

Ehrlichman have repeatedly expressed concern about the tendency of witnesses and others to link or confuse the two defendants' names. The two have faced the same problem as they walk through the hallways and encounter spectators.

At the lunch recess today,
Mr. Ehrlichman was walking from the court with one of his lawyers, William S.
Frates, when a woman began hurrying down the hall after him.

"Mr. Haldeman," she said,
"Mr. Haldeman."

Mr. Ehrlichman turned around.

"Anytime anyone calls me
Mr. Haldeman, it costs them 25 cents," he said.

The woman looked startled, then embarrassed. Mr. Ehrlichman smiled and she smiled back.

"I just want to tell you I admire your fighting spirit," she said.
