Watergate Jurors Are to Get Holiday Reunion With Families

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27 (AP) —For the jurors who have been sequestered for 42 days in the Watergate cover-up trial, Thanksgiving is to be a day-long reunion with their families under the close watch of deputy United States marshals.

At a Washington hotel, which officials declined to name, preparations were made today to serve the 12 jurors, five alternates, members of their families and 17 marshals traditional dinners of turkey, stuffing and cranberry sauce.

In all, plans were made to serve 76 persons in a single banquet room. There will be television sets for watching football.

Horace Webb, a spokesman for the United States Marshals office, said that during the day, as jurors or alternates break off into family groups, a deputy marshal would sit in on each conversation to make sure that the cover-up trial was not discussed.

Members of the jury are prohibited from discussing the case until they begin final deliberations on the guilt or innocence of the five defendants, who are all free.

United States District Judge John J. Sirica has said that he believes the trial will be over in time for the jurors to spend Christmas at home. They have been living at the Mid Town Motel.

This Saturday, as on previous Saturdays, the jurors will be allowed to attend to personal matters, such as visits to barber shops or hairdressers, always in the company of deputy marshals. Visits home to take care of laundry or to pick up personal items are also permitted, but only in the company of a deputy marshal.
