

People and Business

Ex-Nixon Aide Is in Job Market

Frederic V. Malek, former headhunter for President Nixon, is in the market for a job for himself. The 37-year-old Mr. Malek was the last of the H. R. Haldeman management team at the White House to leave after President Ford took over last August.

When Mr. Malek resigned as deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget, he said he was joining the organization of Daniel K. Ludwig, the billionaire shipping magnate, "to assist him in directing his worldwide organization" at a salary reported to be in six figures.

But yesterday John L. Notter, operations head at National Bulk Carriers, Inc., the New York-based outlet for the Ludwig interests, confirmed an impression shared among the executive-search confraternity. "Mr. Malek never did join us," Mr. Notter said. "Things didn't work out. The report was a little premature."

Mr. Ludwig is known to have an intense dislike for publicity. Mr. Malek, who could not be reached for comment, is understood to be working on consulting assignments from his home in McLean, Va. while his executive-search friends keep their eyes peeled for him.

Grant G. Simmons Jr.,

Associated Press

Frederic V. Malek

pany in 1870 in Kenosha, Wis. Mr. Simmons, the 70-year-old present chairman, who started as a timberman in one of the company's plants in 1945, is the son of the great-grandson of the founder.

"I've been acquainted with Mr. Tyler since we were in high school. He signed up for the company in 1955. He is a partners who left in the months following a coup d'état at the venerable investment banking firm. Eventually Peter G. Peterson took the post of chairman as a unifying force.

Yesterday Mr. Malek announced that four associates had joined the firm's partners: Roger N. Michael C. Jr. and Carson R. W.

Lehman Wertheim Lewco tion, back-

ut f