Dean, Magruder, Kalmbach Freed

Sentences Cut Short By Sirica

By Timothy S. Robinson Washington Post Staff Writer

John W. Dean III, Herbert W. Kalmbach and Jeb Stuart Magruder — three close aides of former President Nixon who pleaded guilty to Watergate-related crimes and testified for the prosecution during the Watergate cover-up trial — were released from prison yesterday months before their sentences were scheduled to end.

The unexpected order by U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica came on the basis of routine motions filed over the past four months by attorneys for the three men seeking their early release from jail.

Dean had served four months of a 1-to-4-year sentence. Kalmbach had served six months of a 6-to-18-month sentence. Magruder had served seven months of a 10-month-to-4-year sentence. Prison officials said all three men were free to leave prison yesterday afternoon.

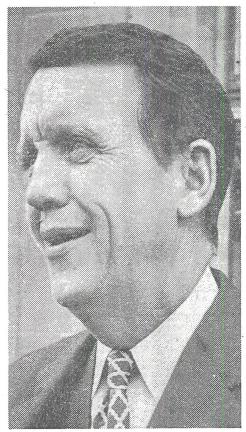

A spokesman for the Watergate special prosecutor's office, which had taken no position on the requests for early release, said there would be no official comment on Judge Sirica's ruling. Dean and Kalmbach are continuing to cooperate with the special prosecutor's office in ongoing investigations, the spokesman said, while the need for Magruder's cooperation seems to have ended.

Several veteran prosecutors said, however, that it was highly unusual for a judge to grant a motion for reduction of sentence in a criminal case and specifically questioned the timing of Sirica's order.

The cover-up trial ended only eight days ago, and the motions had been pending before Sirica while the men had been on the witness stand. He had said he would not act on the motions while the trial was going on.

The Washington Post (1974)

Associated Press

JOHN W. DEAN III HERBERT W. KALMBACH ... released months before sentences were scheduled to end.

Judge Sirica refused to explain or further amplify the terse orders releasing the three men after they were issued around noon yesterday.

"The orders speak for themselves," Sirica said. "I will have no further comment."

However, CBS legal correspondent Fred Graham reported last night that Judge Sirica had told him after issuing the orders that "many things went through my mind" in reaching the decisions.

"... I don't think it has any bearing on what I might or might not do on any other sentence. I did what I thought was right" in these specific cases, Graham reported Sirica as saying.

Some attorneys familiar with the Watergate prosecutions speculated the orders were an indication that Judge Sirica would not impose long prison sentences on the four men who were convicted in

See WATERGATE, A4, Col. 4

Kalmbach expresses gratitude. Page A5.

Jeb Stuart Magruder embraces his wife, Gail, in the garage at their home in Bethesda after his release.

Associated Press

Mrs. John W. Dean III, at her home in Los Angeles, acclaims husband's release.

WATERGATE, From A1

the Watergate cover-up trial that just ended.

In most criminal cases, however, persons who cooperate with the government are given lighter sentences than those defendants in the same case who decide to go to trial, the attorneys added.

attorneys added.

Kalmbach was the only one of the three released men to issue a statement yesterday. He said he felt "no bitterness toward anyone" and expressed his "renewed appreciation and confidence in the essential fairness of American justice."

Reaction varied from other persons connected at various times with the Watergate affair.

fair.

William G. Hundley, the attorney for former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, said, "I'm always glad to see anybody get out of the slammer. I wish them well . . . I can't read anything into it, I just can't."

David G. Bress, the attorney

David G. Bress, the attorney for former Assistnt Attorney General Robert C. Mardian, said, "My reaction's good. I'm interested in it becuase I think it may reflect a disposition on the part of the court in treating those who have not yet been sentenced."

In addition to Mardian and Mitchell, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman were convicted at the Watergate coverup trial.

Martha Mitchell, the estranged wife of Mitchell, told Washington Post reporter Donnie Radcliffe that "I think Dean always should have gone free," but she was less charitable about Magruder and Kalmbach.

She called Magruder "a ly-

Kalmbach were "darn lucky" to be released.

"I'm glad for Dean." she said. "but those other two should go to jail and stay there the rest of their lives." Magruder was the first of the three men to plead guilty to the Watergate cover-up, a plea arrangement that was worked out while the case was still being handled by federal ishment involved in his suspresecutors Earl J. Silbert, pension from law practice. Seymour Glanzer and Donald Campbell.

Magruder entered his plea in August, 1973, to helping plan the bugging of Democratic National Committee headquarters and then conspiring to cover-up the ensuing scandal.

The former White House aide and deputy director of President Nixon's 1972 re-election committee was not sentenced until May 21, 1974, and was given until June 4 to report to the federal prison farm at Allenwood, Pa.

In his request for release from prison filed on Sept. 18, 1974, Magruder's attorneys claimed that "to the extent that his prison sentence was intended to punish, defendant has been punished. He has been taken from his wife, his family and his home under circumstances and amid publicity that have greatly exacerbated his already substantial feelings of guilt and hmiliation."

Kalmbach was former President Nixon's personal lawyer and handled numerous fundraising chores during Mr. Nixon's various quests for public chief counsel Samuel Dash. office.

tion organized by the White House. . He was sentenced on June 17, and given until July 1 to report to prison.

Kalmbach's attorneys filed a request for release prison on Oct. 9 in which they emphasized his cooperation with prosecutors and the punpension from law practice.

They also said that he had raised the funds in question "under the direction and conof superiors in White House . . . whose high offices and public trust and confidence" misled him into thinking his acts were lawful.

Dean, who bartered long and hard with both local prosecutors and the special prose-cutor's office before finally entering a plea to one count of conspiracy to obstruct justice in the Watergate scandal, entered that plea in October, 1973.

He was sentenced in August, 1974, and given until Sept. 3 to put his affairs in order and report to prison in Lompoc, Calif

Actually, he and Kalmach have been housed for much of their terms in a "safe house" operated for government wit-nesses by U.S. marshals at Ft. At le Holabird, Md.

Dean's attorneys filed a motion on Dec. 2 asking that filed their client be released from jail, a request that included a lengthy supporting letter from Senate Watergate committee

Dean's attorneys cited what ing SOB" and said he and dling an ambassadorship in an fice as well as the pardon of illicit 1970 fund-raising opera- former President Nixon as justification for Dean's early release from prison.

A request for reduction of sentence must be filed within 120 days of final action in a defendant's individual case, but the judge can act on it at any time.

None of the defendants nor their attorneys were in court yesterday, and Judge Sirica merely released the orders through court channels.

Dean's wife, Maureen, who accompanied him during his testimony before the Senate Watergate committee, said she felt her husband was released by Judge Sirica to reward him helping to expose Watergate conspiracy.

"He deserved it. He has been sufficiently punished," Mrs. Dean told reporters in California, where the Deans own a home.

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. (R-Conn.), a member of the Senate Watergate committee had also supported Dean's release, said in a state-ment after hearing of Sirica's orders: "There is no doubt in my mind that the former President and his intimates did everything possible to destroy this man, his family and asso-

At least two proscutors who have worked directly on Watergate case said that they felt Dean got off too easily with four months in jail for his major role in the cover-up. despite his later cooperation.

"The cover-up could not have existed without Dean," one prosecutor said. "He was He pleaded guilty in Febru-ary, 1974, to secretly raising dented cooperation" with although it was on the direc-millions of dollars and ped-the special prosecutor's of-tion of higher-ups."

Chief Watergate cover-up prosecutor James F. Neal said in a telephone interview from Nashville that he was unaware of Sirica's plans to release the three men.

"My only comment is that Judge Sirica is an extremely honorable man . . . unswerving in his devotion to what he deems right and just. This is his decision," said Neal, who is now in private practice.

Some members of the special prosecutor's staff were known to be fearful for Dean's safety if he were moved to a regular prison, where govern-ment witnesses in general are not readily accepted by other inmates. They described him as "a classic government witness" who might be endangered in a prison atmosphere.

There are other motions for eduction of sentence by Watergate-related defendants pending before federal judges, including one by former White House special counsel Charles W. Colson. Colson has served more than six months of a one-to-four-year prison sentence for his plea to obstruction of justice in the prosecution of Pentagon Papers codefendant Daniel Ellsberg.

Contributing to this report were Washington Post staff writers Lawrence Meyer, Donnie Radcliffe and Austin Scott.

British Shirt-Makers

LONDON, Jan. 8 (UPI)-The British shirt-manufactur-ing industry is suffering big reductions in its labor force, widespread factory closures and shorter working hours working hours due mainly to cheap imports, its representatives said today.

X See NYT 9 Jan 75, "An Objection by the Prosecution Could Have Kept Dean in Prison."