NYTimes

Italians Preparing to Send U.S. Extradition Request for Sindona

Special to The New York Times

Feels Extradition Unlikely

Mr. Sindona was quoted in an talian magazine interview last week as having said in New York that United States authorities were unlikely to agree of an Italian extradition demand. He fold Panorama magazine of Milan that such a request would be fuffice because "the charges leveled at me in Italy are without any basis."

Mr. Sindona's system of in-

Mr. Sindona's system of in-terlocking banks and com-panies, contrilled by him from such tax havens as Luxembourg such tax havens as Luxembourg and Liechtenstein, was estimated to be worth $450-million to $500-million only a year ago. Since then, the iSndona empire has rapidly crumbled.

The Vatican said last month that a Roman Catholic Church institution based here bed mis-institution based here had suf-fered "limited losses" in the ROME. Feb. 17—A request closing of two banks in Milan and Geneva that Mr. Sindona had controlled.

Mr. Sindona is also under investigation by court officials in Milan on suspicion of having paid bribes to Italian politicians in exchange for illegal favors. The financier said in New York, is expected to reach the United States this week.

Mr. Sindona, who is 53 years old and was born in Sicily, now lives with his family at the Hotel Pierre in New York.

A spokesman for the Justice Ministry here said today that Italy was preparing a formal demand for the financier's extradition and that the Foreign Ministry would forward it to Washington shortly.

The request is based on two arrest warrants against Mr. Sindona issued by Italian courts last autumn. He has been charged with fraudulent bank-ruptcy, falsification of books and related offenses.

Feels Extradition Unlikely