Cash in Alleged Cover-up Traced at Connally Trial

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON Special to The New York Ti

WYTimes

WASHINGTON, April 9—A $20 bill from the Federal Re-serve Bank in Chicago became a central ingredient today in the bribery trial of John B. Connally as Government prose-cutors sought to trace the origins of money allegedly used by the former Treasury Secre-tary to cover a $10,000 payoff.

The bank note was one of several hundred that figured in testimony of 11 witnesses who aPpeared in United States District Court, all of them to talk about money.

talk about money. The jurors stared at a huge facsimile of a sample $20 bill. An official of the United States Bureau of Printing and Engrav-ing explained the identification of currency. And officers of seven Federal Reserve Banks around the country testified as to the swiftness—or in some cases the slowness — with which they funneled new bank-notes into circulation. The testimony hore on the notes into circulation. The testimony bore on the Government's effort to corro-borate the account of the key prosecution witness, Jake Ja-cobsen. He testified earlier that in 1971 he gave Mr. Connally $10,000 as a payoff from a dairy farmer cooperative and joined the former Treasury Se-cretary two years later in an intricate effort to hide the pay-ment. ment.

Purpose Seems Opaque

Purpose Seems Opaque The purpose of much of the testimony today about currency seemed opaque to Chief Judge George L. Hart Jr., and some of the seven women and five men in the jury box dazed looks. Judge Hart professed his bewilderment to the prosecu-tor, Frank M. Tuerkheimer, and the defense attorney, Edward Bennett Williams.

"I guess you and Mr. Wil-liams know what you're doing," Judge Hart told Mr. Tuerkhei-mer. "I don't."

Judge Hart told Wir. Fuerkier mer. "I don't." Neither side elaborated, in court or out, on its purpose. But Mr. Tuerkheimer was evidently attempting to lend credence to Mr. Jacobsen's ac-count of two 1973 meetings, at each of which, he alleged, Mr. Connally gave him $10,000 in cash to place in a bank deposit box in Austin, Tex. Mr. Williams apparently sought to lay a foundation for a later effort to persuade the jury that some of the currency involved in the wo allegd transactions in 1973 might not have been in circulation at the time, and that, accordingly, Mr.

have been in circulation at the time, and that, accordingly, Mr. Jacobsen had concocted the testimony. Mr. Jacobsen, a one-imet lawyer for Associated Milk Pro-ducers, Inc., the nation's largest dairymen's cooperative, swore to the jury last week that Mr. Connally gave him $10,000 on Oct. 29, 1973, to back up a cover story that the alleged $10,000 payoff money had lain untouched in the bank box since May, 1971. This much of the testimony today centered on the Government' efforts to show that the specific bills Mr. Jacobsen tes-tified he got from Mr. Connally on Oct. 29 had in fact been in circulation, and available to Mr. Connally, by that date. The defense has contended that no money passed between

The defense has contended that no money passed between Mr. Jacobsen and Mr. Connally, and that Mr. Jacobsen's account was contrived to incriminate the former cabinet officer false-br banks and then into circulation. In each instance today, the seven bankers certified records showing that the bills in ques-tion should have gone into ge-neral circulation before Oct. 29, 1973.

29, 1973. But the officials of the Feder-al Reserve Banks in Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, St. Louis, New York City, Minneapolis and Piiladelphia testified that there were no records to de-monstrate conclusively that such was the case with $20 bills. They said that the banks did not keep records of the precise dates that $20 bills en-tered the public money supply, although they did keep records on bills of largely denomina-tions. tions.

Mr. Williams therefore pressed Daniel P. Kinsella, an assistant vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chica-go, on the history of one $20 bill that Mr. Kinsella said had gone from a storage world bill that Mr. KINSella Salo had gone from a storage vault to the bank's currency department b yAug. 29, 1973—exactly two months before the alleged transaction in Houston, Tex., between Mr. Connally and Mr. Lacobsen. Jacobsen.

Mr. Kinsella testifled, on cross-examination by Mr. Wil-liams, that it would have been "quite unusual" for the Chicago bank to have retained posses-sion of the $20 bill longer than 30 days.

Chronology of Bills

Mr. Williams drew from exec-ntives of other Federal Re-serve Banks a chronology of bills that had taken considerably longer than 30 days to pass through their vanlts and into circulation.

into circulation. Clifford Saxon of the Atlan-ta bank told Mr. Williams that the records showed that one banknote, bearing serial number F02011774A, had ar-rived at the bank in 1955 but not gone into circulation until Dec. 16, 1969. Records of other alleged cover-up bills that came from the Atlanta bank showed that they had not gone into circulation for periods ranging from 45 days to three years. Similarly, George Haag of

had, been kept as long as seven and a half mhs at that bank:s storage facility before being turned over to the cash department for circulation.

The importance of the testi-mony is not likely to become apparent to the jury until the prosecution and defense offer prosecution and detense of the their closing arguments, pro-bably late next week.

Before the bankers' testimony today, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation testi-fied to having taken possession of both the $10,000 bundles of cash at issue.

Philip A. Greb, an agent in the San Antonio, Tex., field office of the F.B.I., calmly snipped the seal on a white canvas bag and then riffed through 346 bills whose total face value was $10,000. He said that it was the same cash he inventoried at Mr. Jacob-sen:s bank in Austin on Nov. 27, 1973—"Mr. Jacobsen made the comment that he was glad it was all there," the agent said—and seized on Feb. 21, 1974 1974.

1974. John Graven, a security offi-cer of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, later verified records indicating that some of the bills that Mr. Greb had seized bore serial numbers showing that they had not left the bureau until as late as October, 1971.
