Ron Ziegler Is Hired By Engineering Firm

Slated for "extensive responsibilities for the firm's work in the Middle East," Ron Ziegler has been named managing director of international services for Syska & Hennessy, the New York engineering consultants with branches in Washington, Paris and Teheran, Iran. The former Nixon press secretary will be based in Washington but "will have lots to do with Teheran," according to Arnold Windman, executive vice president. He declined to name a salary for Mr. Ziegler, a former advertising man and 1961 graduate of the University of Southern California.

Syska & Hennessy designed the mechanical and electric systems for the United Nations headquarters, the Albany Mall complex, Lincoln Center, Madison Square Garden and some of the buildings in Rockefeller Center, where its office here is located.
