

Notes on People by Laurie Johnston

Julie Nixon Eisenhower, preparing pork chops at an NBC "Not for Women Only" taping yesterday to promote her new cookbook for children, said she had learned everything she knew about cooking since her marriage to David Eisenhower six years ago. Her mother, she said, was not very interested in food and "generally what we had when we were children was spaghetti, chicken or meat loaf." Mrs. Eisenhower said she and her husband live five minutes away from the White House. "You know, I never look at it when I pass by," she said. "I try not to."
