JAN 3 1 1976 LANDMARK RULING

30-Day Deadline Is Set for Restructuring of Federal Commission

By LESLEY OELSNER ial to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30 -- In a landmark ruling on how political campaigns are to be waged, the Supreme Court today upheld public financing for Presidential contests, limits on how much may be contributed by individuals to any Federal election race, and strict requirements for reporting both contributions and expenditures.

At the same time, the Court struck down as unconstitutional all limits on how much can be spent in a campaign for Congress by a candidate or in his behalf, and struck down nearly all limits on spending in a campaign for President.

The text of court's decision is printed on Pages 12, 13.

The Court permitted one exception regarding unlimited spending for Presidential contenders: In upholding the public financing system, it also upheld the requirement that candidates who accept Federal financing must in return abide by limits on expenditures.

The spending limits had been a major part of the broad campaign financing reform legislation that was enacted last win-ter to prevent abuses and illegalities in campaigns of the kind disclosed by the Watergate scandal.

Order on Commission

The Court also ruled that the new Federal Election Commission, created to implement the reform legislation, must either be restructured or, 30 days from now, cease exercising all but a few of its powers.

The Court ruled that many of the powers and duties that the new law gave to the com-mission-such as the power to initiate civil lawsuits to enforce the law-were powers and duties that could be constitutionally exercised only by Federal officers appointed by the President.

The majority of commission members are named by officials of Congress. As a result, the Court said, the commission lacks authority to exercise those powers.

The Court stayed the effect of its ruling for 30 days to give Congress a chance to enact remedial legislation.

The current contenders in the Presidential primaries have already been operating under the new contribution, disclosure and public financing provisions. Since each has accepted public financing, each is bound by spending limits as a condition of that financing. The restructuring of the Federal Election Commission is all Continued on Page 13, Column 1

1.9

1.9.

11

à

8 6

act.

dir.

10

S ú.

the First Amendment violation. Speaking of the limits on contributions and spending, for instance, the Court majority— in an unsigned opinion, joined in some parts by five Justices and in other parts by six, seven, or eight—said: "The present act's contribu-tion and expenditure limita-tions impose direct quantity re-strictions on political com-munication and association by persons, groups, candidates and persons, groups, candidates and political parties."

However, the Court went on to distinguish between contri-1: d butions and elections. Limiting expenditures, the Court said, is a "substantial" restraint on speech, adding that the limit of $1,000 on what individual may spend rela-tive to a clearly identified car-tive to a clearly identified car-tisement advocating that per-tisement advocating that per-tical parties, and the institu-tical parties, and the institu-didate or party, however, the link was portices wil-tiam J. Brennan Jr., Potter Stewart, Thurgood Marshall, Lewis Powell Jr., Harry A. Blackmun, William H. Rehm-DC butions and elections.

Continued From Page 1, Col. 8 that must be done, at this point, as a result of the ruling. The long-range effect of the ceptibily with the size of his ruling, though, is vast—both in terms of the practical rules for campaigns, and in terms of the extent of the guarantees that the Constitution, especial-governmental needs undelying ly the First Amendment, have now been interpreted to con-tain. Court said, is only a "marginal" restriction, for the "quantity of communication by the con-tributor does not increase per-tributor. After making that distinction, the court then weighed each the limits against the governmental needs undelying the law. In the case of contributions, it held that "it is unnecessary now been interpreted to con-tain. While the Court did strike down portions of the new law, it held that "it is unnecessary to look beyond the act's pri-down portions of the new law, it held that "it is unnecessary to look beyond the act's pri-actuality and appearance of law drastically changed the rules for political contenders. The law was enacted largely to prevent corruption and the appearance of corruption in the "To the extent that large to prevent corruption and the appearance of corruption in the political process. It was chal-lenged, in the lawsuit that led to today's ruling, by 12 persons and groups, including former Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, on the ground that it violated a series of constitutional pro-tyisions and particularly the First Amendment's guarantee of free speech. What the Court did in to-

First Amendment's guarantee of tices can never be reliably free speech. What the Court did in to-day's ruling was balance the governmental interests underly-ing the law against constitu-tional guarantees—the need to prevent abuses such as Water-gate, for example, againt possi-ble infringements by the law on free speech. Possible Problems Seen The Court found that various portions of the law, particularly the limits on Spending and con-tributions, but also the require-ments regarding reporting and disclosure posed possible First Amendment problems. But, ex-cept in the case of spending limits, it found that the inter-ests underlying the legislation outweighed the need to prevent the First Amendment violation. Speaking of the limits on contributions and spending, for the first Amendment violation.

The distinctions drawn by the majority drew some criticism from dissenting Justices—criti-cism that sometimes seemed ironic in that it at least some of it expressed what might be considered a "civil libertarian view," urging more stringent First Amendment protections than did the majority, and it came from Justices who have been categorized as conservative.

Warren E. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, for example, said, "For me contributions and expendi-

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1976

Eugene J. McCarthy, former Democratic Senator from Minnesota, left, and Senator James L. Buckley, Republican-Conservative of New York, hold news conference in Washington to express their satisfaction with the court ruling.

quist and Byron R. White. John Paul Stevens, who was sworn in after the arguments in the case, did not participate. The voting breakdown was as follows:

¶Sustaining limits on con-tributions: The vote was 6-2, with Justices Burger and Blackmun dissenting.

tributions: The vote was 6-2, with Justices Burger and Black-mun dissenting. GStriking down Imitations on expenditures: The vote was 6-2 on limiting expenditures by a candidate or his family, with Justices White and Marshall dissenting; for other spending limits, the vote was 7-1, with only Justice White dissenting. Gustaining disclosure and tresses, and business occupa-tions of those who contribute more than $100. GSustaining public financing plan under which, he said minor party and independent candidates are discriminated gainst. The structure of the court ission: All agreed, except that insigned to entry and independent candidates are discriminated plan under which, he said mission all agreed, except that insigned to entry and independent candidates are discriminated plan under which the save mission all agreed, except that insigned to entry and independent candidates are discriminated cheif Justice Burger disented ing. Other powers, the Court decided all of the control to date. The didition, there was dis-minor party and independent candidates are discriminated ing. Other powers, the Court for statute, The didition, there was dis-minor party and independent candidates are discriminated ing. Other powers, the Court decided all of the contribution against the possible Chief Justice Burger disented ing. Other powers, the Court constitutional problems that the from the Court's sutaining the gislative And and except that instain and deciding which matters to state agreement on the enting. To perform these latter non-majority opinion were justices Brown U. Costs Rising The Court's ruling regarding membership must be selected in Brown Corporation.