

Leary, Once an LSI

Reversing a decision made less than two months ago, the United States Parole Board voted yesterday to release Timothy F. Leary June 7 from the Federal Correctional Center in San Diego. The 55-year-old former Harvard psychologist, a leading advocate of the drug LSD in the 1960's, has served a year of a 10-year sentence for transporting marijuana.

Dr. Leary had appealed the Feb. 24 rejection of his parole request. The board, voting yesterday in Washington, announced no reason for the reversal. Sentenced to prison in 1970, he escaped to Algeria and later to Afghanistan, where he was arrested and deported to the United States. Dr. Leary gained notoriety for advising young people to "tune in, turn on and drop out," but in an appeal for release from an earlier term in state prison he declared himself "totally rehabilitated" and said he would "never, under any circumstances, advocate the use of LSD or any drug."

Martha Mitchell, who has been receiving chemo therapy since October for a form of bone cancer, is at the hospital for Special Surgery following a second operation, this time on an arm broken in a fall at her apartment here. Mrs. Mitchell, released Jan. 20 after two months at the Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research, had a previous operation for a broken femur just below the hip, but had progressed from a wheelchair to using a walker. As the result of myeloma, which attacks the bone marrow, Mrs. Mitchell had suffered earlier fractures of the ribs and vertebrae.

Mrs. Mitchell, aged 57, and her husband, John, the former Attorney General, have been separated since 1973. A report in the May issue of McCall's magazine describes Mrs. Mitchell as nearly isolated, shunning the telephone and with no visits from her husband or her equally estranged 14-year-old daughter, Marty. Her only regular visitor is Jay Jennings, her 28-year-old son by a previous marriage, who is research assistant for the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee. "Mom seems in relatively good spirits," he said yesterday, "but she seems to have withdrawn a bit to fight this by herself."

When Princeton University posted the admissions list yesterday for the Class of 1980, one of the names was Hilary Margaret Bok, daughter of Harvard's president, Derek C. Bok. Miss Bok has been preceded at Princeton by her cousin, Hilary Abigail Bok, a senior, who is the daughter of Dr. Bok's old brother, Ben P. Bok of Los Angeles. Other names yesterday's list include Nancy White, daughter of Justice Byron R. White of the Supreme Court and Auchincloss, son of Auchincloss, the author.

In Moscow, Zoya Zoyeva picked up her month exit visa paying the non-refundable fee of $344. She said she would leave for St. Petersburg April 28, two weeks before the expected child. The daughter is named after an American, Fred P. Zoyeva. This is the first time a woman has been born in Moscow since the war.
