

from Notes on People:

...ent of Queen
... it when it docks in
New York today.

NYTimes JUL 9 1976

In Portland, Ore., John D. Ehrlichman reiterated that, in the aftermath of Watergate, he would not have accepted a pardon because "a pardon carried a connotation of guilt and I was confident of acquittal." But now, the former White House aide, who is appealing his sentence of 20 months to five years, says that "I would accept a pardon—I don't feel any less guilty but I've been through two trials and I've seen what I'm up against."

LAURIE JOHNSTON