PARIS, March 16 — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis today visited the chapel of the American Hospital here, where the body of her husband Aristotle Onassis lay, as preparations were made for burial on his private Greek island of Skorpios.

Mr. Onassis died yesterday of bronchial pneumonia. His wife, widowed for the second time, was in New York. She flew to Paris last night, arriving at Charles de Gaulle Airport on an Air France flight at 7. This morning.

Mrs. Onassis went directly to their Paris apartment. At 5:15 P.M., she went to the hospital where her husband's body was lying on a bier. Hospital officials said it would remain there until it was flown directly to Skorpios, probably tomorrow afternoon or Tuesday morning.

The wealthy ship-owner's daughter, Christina, had been with her father through Friday night and when he died on Saturday. She did not go to the hospital today.

Fortune to Christina

Christina will be the main beneficiary of the Onassis fortune. She is 24, daughter of Mr. Onassis and his first wife, Tina Livanos. That marriage ended in divorce, and in 1971 Tina married Stavros Niarchos, a business rival of Mr. Onassis.

Friends said Christina had been "deeply traumatized" by the series of tragic events in her family over the last few years. Her mother's sister, Eugenie, died in an apparent suicide, her own brother, Alexander, died in a plane crash, and then her mother, Tina, died suddenly last year.

Before she was 21, Christina married a California real estate man, Joseph Bolker. Mr. Onassis, who opposed the marriage, changed a trust fund he had set up for her. But the marriage lasted only nine months and Christina and her father were later reconciled.

She came to Paris with him from Athens when his fatal illness began last month and stayed until he died. She is now unmarried.

Whether or not she is in the will, Jacqueline Onassis may be entitled to at least one-eighth of the Onassis fortune by Greek law. In any case, arrangements made at the time of her wedding on Skorpios in 1968 would provide for her to receive about $120-million, according to friends of the Onassis family in Athens. They said this did not include trust funds of $15-million each for her two children, John F. Kennedy Jr. and Caroline Kennedy.

The Onassis collection of paintings was conservatively valued by Athens art dealers at $20-million. They include works by Gauguin, El Greco, Van Gogh and Picasso, and some of the, one dealer said, are already hanging in the Manhattan apartment of Mrs. Onassis on Fifth Avenue.

When Mrs. Onassis went to the hospital this afternoon, she was accompanied only by Mr. Onassis' private nurse, attendants said.

Mrs. Onassis was wearing the same black leather coat, black shoes and black stockings in which she had arrived this morning. She did not have a hat or veil.

She went alone through the bronze doors of the chapel where the body was lying with a Greek Orthodox icon on the chest. Flowers had been placed in the room shortly before she arrived.

A cousin of Mr. Onassis, Costa Conialides, was taking charge of arrangements for the funeral and burial, and hospital officials were awaiting his instructions. Mr. Onassis had said that he wanted to be buried on the opposite side of the chapel at Skorpios from the grave of Alexander, who was killed in an air crash at the age of 23 two years ago.

The island had served in recent years as a summer vacation place for Mrs. Onassis and her husband, as well as her two children by President Kennedy.

It was not clear who would inherit the island. The fortune left by Mr. Onassis has been estimated at more than $500-million.

Mr. Onassis also is survived by a sister and two half-sisters, who are expected to be included in the will.

Will Reported Written

A Greek confidant of Mr. Onassis said he had told friends that he made a will, but did not tell them any details. The source said that it would probably be enormously complicated, since the financial empire was an intricate maze of cross-holdings and he was the only person who knew the secret of its system.

He tended to create separate companies for each operation, including one that owns his Paris apartment.

Since the death of his son, the shipping magnate had lost some of his enthusiasm for business. He was negotiating the sale of Olympic Airways to the Greek Government when he fell ill, having told friends that the rise in the cost of oil no longer made the operation economical.

Prince Rainier of Monaco was one of the first government leaders to issue a statement.

"There will be no more men of such stature," he said, "death deprives us of an unpretentious and good man who was remarkably clever. He was also a discreet and faithful friend. He built his economic empire with only the qualities of his mind and his ability."

Egyptian Office Damaged

A window of the Egyptian Government tourist office in Rockefeller Center was smashed with a brick early yesterday, the police reported. A caller to United Press International shortly before 4 A.M. attributed the vandalism to a group calling itself SOIL, an acronym for "Save Our Israel." The caller described it as "our answer to [Henry] Kissinger's pressure on Israel to relinquish vital land." The police said that they knew of no witnesses to the incident and that no one was inside the Egyptian office, at 630 Fifth Avenue, when the vandalism occurred.
