INDIANAPOLIS, April 25—In a political cartoon appearing in newspapers here a few days ago, Senator Robert Kennedy and his wife, depicted as Bonny, roaring through a roadster and to the wife. In there is war before the pri-man for Kennedy enters in Indianapolis no information could be obtained on paid canvassers.

One indication of the importance of Indiana to the Kennedys is the fact that Jerry Bruno of the Senator's New York staff came here to direct a team of advance men. Mr. Bruno, a small, intense man, is said to be a master at the difficult trade of advance work.

Once a Kennedy man in the West committed the unforgivable political sin of arranging for the charging of admission for a Kennedy appearance. Before the Senator stepped off the plane, Mr. Bruno marched down the steps and stripped the puzzled man's "Kennedy Staff" pin from his lapel.

The Kennedy people tried without success over some of the cratic officials in
