

A man in a hurry?

LEE OSWALD, the man accused of shooting President Kennedy, was apparently one of the most courteous men in history, given the circumstances. According to cabdriver William Whaley in the Warren Report, Oswald—said to be escaping from the assassination scene—asked him in measured tones, "May I have this cab?" He entered and sat down next to the driver. Then, Whaley testified:

"About that time an old lady, I think she was an old lady, I don't remember nothing but her sticking her head down past him in the door and said, 'Driver, will you call me a cab down here?'

"She had seen him get this cab and she wanted one, too, and he opened the door a little bit like he was going to get out and he said, 'I will let you have this one,' and she says, 'No, the driver can call me one.'"
