Kennedy Archives Illuminate Cuba Policy

Archivist at work on Kennedy paper in Waltham, Mass.

NT. TIMES By HENRY RAYMONT AUG 1 7 1970

The John F. Kennedy Mem-|eventually became first selection of its 15 million as he said, "Let's quit talking pages of documents and manuabout this subject. scripts, including transcripts of 300 oral-history interviews with situation involved a two-page such figures as Nikita S. Khru-memorandum from the State shchev, Mike Mansfield and a Department officer concerned White House upholsterer.

the Federal Records Center in with President Eisenhower. No bulk consists of White House arations for the Bay of Pigs correspondence and other, less landing although they had been important papers, but that the under way for almost a year interviews add to the historical because, as the official, Robert record many details of the Pres- A. Hurwitch, recalled, no one ident's attitudes and policies, below the rank of assistant secparticularly on foreign rela- retary was aware of them. tions.

The ing only a minor selection of the dent's personal representative oral-history program initiated in the beleaguered city-long soon after Mr. Kennedy's assas-believed to have been at odds sination in November, 1963—with Mr. Kennedy over the use disclose some insights into his of stronger measures to counmajor decisions on foreign pol-ter Soviet pressures-said, icy.

tial campaign and after his elec-olution than many of his astion, for example, Mr. Kennedy sociates." and George A. Smathers, a close | General Clay recalled in an friend then in the Senate who oral-history interview that his had long been interested in Latin plan to send fighter squadrons America, frequently discussed to escort American transport ways to overturn Premier planes that were being buzzed Fidel Castro, including a pos- by the Russians was not opsible assassination attempt. Ac-posed by the President but by cording to the Forida Demo-

orial Library has opened to patient with his friend's advice scholars and researchers the that one day he broke a plate

Another aspect of the Cuban with Cuba that was designed A study of the documents at to brief Mr. Kennedy for his the library's temporary home, first meeting as President-elect Waltham, Mass., found that the mention was made of the prep-

In the Berlin crisis of 1961, interviews - represent- Gen. Lucius D. Clay, the Presihad very distinct feelings that During the 1960 Presiden the President had greater res-

crat's account, the President Continued on Page 16, Column 1

Continued From Page 1, Col. 7

Gen. Lauris Norstad of the Air Force, then commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, who reflected the reluctance of the Western allies.

In the course of Mr. Kennedy's tenure, several career Foreign Service officers complained bitterly over what they considered to be interference in foreign policy by members of Mr. Kennedy's White House staff. In particular, G. Frederick Reinhardt, then United State Ambassador to Rome and now at Stanford University, criticized efforts by Arthur M. Schlesinger for Support an alliance befir to support an alliance be-ween Italy's progressive Roman atholic and democratic Soc-alists as a model for progres-sive governments in West Ger-many, France and elsewhere.

An Ambitious Project

The Kennedy oral-history program began in March, 1964—one of the most ambitious projects of its kind. That month President Kennedy's widow and his brother Robert, then the Attorney General, asked foreign leaders, public figures and friends to make tape recordings of their memories and impressions of him and of their dealings with him. ings with him.

The program, which has accumulated some 800 interviews and is continuing under the gui-dance of the National Archives, the administrating agency of the Presidential Libraries, was designed to provide raw ma-terial for historians and biographers.

John F. Stewart, acting di-rector of the Kennedy Library, has estimated that interviews with key figures of the Kennedy with Key figures of the Kennedy-years, including his widow, Rob-ert Kennedy, Rober S. Mc-Namara, Dean Rusk and Mc-George Bundy, are likely to re-main closed for several dec-ades and in some cases as long at the lifetime of those interas the lifetime of those interviewed.

Portions of interviews containing confidential references to national security or to living persons were deleted and will be opened in 20 or 30 years, depending on the donors' specifications fications.

The transcripts also include statements from and interviews with Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the deposed ruler of Cambodia; Leonard Bernstein, the conductor; Senator George Aiken, Republican of Vermont; U Thant Secretary General of the United Nations, and Larry Ara-ta, the White House upholster-

Warm Personal Relationship

Interviews with Mr. Arata, an amateur accordion player, and six other White House em-and six other White House employes indicated a warm personal relationship with the Kennedy family.

"One day," Mr. Arata said, "I was asked to play for Caroline and her schoolmates on the third floor—about 20 children were present. I loved it—I guess that's the Italian in me."

The reference to the assas-

that's the Italian in me."

The reference to the assassination plot against Premier Castro, who came to power in 1959, was contained in a 165-page transcript of a series of interviews with Mr. Smathers, who frequently accompanied Mr. Kennedy on trips to Florida. Although the transcript has been heavily edited, deleting passages apparently dealing with the Bay of Pigs and the U.S.-Soviet missile crisis of 1962, it gave a detailed account of conversations with the Presiof conversations with the President from the period just before his election victory.

"I don't know whether he brought it up or I brought it up," Mr. Smathers said in an interview dated March 31, 1964. "We had further conversation on assassination of Fidel sation on assassination of Fidel Castro, what would be the reaction, how would the people react, would the people be gratified."

"As I recollect," added Mr. Smathers, who has retired for reasons of health, "he was just throwing out a great barrage of questions—he was certain it could be accomplished—I remember that—it would be no great problem. But the question was whether or not it tion was whether or not it would accomplish that which he wanted it to, whether or not the reaction throughout South America would be good or bad.
"And I talked with him about it, and, frankly, at this particular time I felt and later on learned that he did, that I wasn't so much for the idea of assassination, particularly where it could be pinned to the U.S."

When the idea was discarded, Mr. Smathers suggested provoking an incident at the Uni-

United Press International

Senator George A. Smathers of Florida leaving the White House after a breakfast meeting with President Kennedy in 1960. They often discussed plans to overthrow Fidel Castro.

tirst counseled Mr. Kennedy to by this memorandum, I rememtake a hard line against the Castro Government before a back on the high ground' and speech in Miami during the 1960 say that Cuba was a problem campaign, at a time when Adlai E. Stevenson and other advisers Stevenson did."

Mr. Smathers recalled that were urging that the candidate play down Cuba in favor of helping the rest of Latin America to fight poverty and build lemocracy.

Mr. Smathers recalled that soon after the inauguration, Mr. Kennedy invited him to the White House to swim and to discuss a trade embargo the helping the rest of Latin Amprica to fight poverty and build lemocracy.

"Just prior to the speech while riding in the car," Mr. Smathers recounted, "I told him that he should talk about the importance of Cuba in our whole international relations problem, to recognize that it was a danger and a threat to the rest of Latin America and so on."

Mr. Kennedy, the Senator said, replied that he had "a pretty good speech" for his appearance in Miami and proposed to make "the big Latin-American speech" later in Tampa, which at that time had a larger Cuban population than Miami.

According to a statement by William Attwood, a campaign

White House to swim and to discuss a trade embargo the Senator had proposed during the election campaign. He said the President showed him a secret memorandum from Secretary of State Rusk endorsing the idea but pointing out other officials in the department opposed it. "I don't know if the dates could be reconstructed," Mr. Smathers said, "but I told the President that I was pleased and I thought Rusk was smarter than pearance in Miami and proposed to make "the big Latin-to be. I didn't know Rusk at all, but I can say that I have since come to the conclusion that he is a very able man not only on this but on all other matters."

After the Bay of Pigs in-tanamo Bay, on the eastern tip of Cuba, as a pretext for a military strike.

"I did talk to him about a plan of having a false attack made on Guantanamo Bay which would give us the excuse of actually fomenting a fight which would then give us the excuse to go, in and do the job," Mr. Smathers related.

"He asked me to write him something about it. And I think I did. I don't know if he ever kept any memorandums I wrote him or whether he just threw them away."

Mr. Smathers recalled that he first counseled Mr. Kennedy was upset by this memorandum, I remembry to wist with you, I want to discuss the content of Look, recalled that he hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that do come to an end and that fice in Latin-American matters that come to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that do come to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that one Latin-American matters that come to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that ocome to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that ocome to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the dent on Latin-American matters that ocome to an end and that the hoped to display sufficient firmness to restore the morale of the West Berliners, that ocome to an end and that the hoped to convince the Russians that any further to white House advisers who said Mr. Kennedy was paying closer attention to White House advisers who said Mr. Kennedy was paying closer attention to White House advisers who said Mr. Kennedy was paying closer attention to White House advisers who said Mr. Senshand been overly influenced by the dictators he met during the dictators he may an understant the hoped to co visit with you, I want to discuss' things with you, but I don't want you to talk to me any more about Cuba."

Mr. Smathers said he follow-John F. Kennedy in the White ed that injunction until the President invited him to an informal dinner.

"I remember the President was actually fixing our own dinner, and I raised the question of Cuba and what could be done and so on," he related. "And I communications with Italian remember that he took his fork and just hit his plate and it cracked and he said, 'Now, dammit, I wish you wouldn't do that. Let's quit talking about this subject.' I said: 'All right, it's just fine with me. I appreciate the opportunity to come and visit with you, and this subject I won't bring up again'—and I never did."

Details of how the State De
"I remember the President Italian Premier, Amintore Fandani, when the two met in the summer of 1961. Mr. Reinhardt also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct and so on," he related. "And I remember that the follow that the white House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the White House aide's direct also expressed indignation at the partment's second echelon had been bypassed on the Bay of Pigs plans were outlined by Mr. Hurwitch, now a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs, in an interview 200 can Affairs, in an interview 200 pages long and dated April 24, 1964.

"There was, in my judgment, a divorce between the people who daily or minute by minute, had access to information, to what was going on, and the people who were making plans and policy decisions," Mr. Hurwitch said. "This divorce is one which has cost us, as history has shown."

The 1961 Berlin Crisis

President Kennedy's response to the Soviet pressures on West Berlin in the fall of 1961—which the President interpreted as the first move in an effort to weaken the United States position in Europe—was described by General Clay in an interpretable of the United States of Europe—was described by General Clay in an interview on July 1, 1964.

Discussing his first meeting with the President in mid-August, when the Administration seemed divided between advisers such as Dean Acheson, President Truman's Secretary of State. who favored stiff mili-State, who favored stiff military measures, and a White House staff committed to the quest for diplomatic solutions, General Clay said:

"First, there was no mistake, at least in my thinking, that the President had already made up his mind that we were going to be firm in Berlin Secondly ted States naval base at Guan-aide, the Senator's satisfaction vasion, which Mr. Smathers to be firm in Berlin. Secondly tanamo Bay, on the eastern tip with the speech was not shared strongly favored, he felt that that he hoped to display suf-

Reinhardt Saw Cabal

The diplomat challenged an assertion in Mr. Schlesinger's 1965 book, "A Thousand Days: Mr. Smathers said he follow-John F. Kennedy in the White ed that injunction until the House," that the President had President invited him to an in-pledged such support to the Associated Press

Robert A. Hurwitch, State Department aide on Cuba, recalled that no one below rank of Assistant Secretary was aware in 1960 of plans for the Bay of Pigs landing.

President saw a Socialist coalition with the Christian Democrats as a movement that would also "be helpful in forming more democratic governments in Latin America."

Commenting on a complaint in Mr. Schlesinger's book that it took "a long and exasperating fight" before the professional diplomats were made to comal diplomats were made to comply with the President's policy, Mr. Fraleigh suggested that this was an allusion to officials at the embassy in Rome and in the State Department "who were very concerned about the effect of the Socialists' joining the government might have upon Italian foreign policy."

'Outstanding Statesman'

In other interviews, President Kennedy was remembered as "an outstanding statesman" (Mr. Khrushchev) and one who "never sought to overpersuade a friendly nation or to impose on an adversary terms which on an adversary terms which would subject a hostile government to an unacceptable loss of face" (David K. E. Bruce, former United States Ambassador to Britain and now chief delegate to the Paris peace table) for the Bay of Pigs landing.

to move American policy in this field in a more aggressive and active stance."

But William N. Fraleigh, another diplomat, who had been appointed as Mr. Reinhardt's political counselor, told an interviewer that he "at least once" heard the President tell whip, and Seantor Mansfield, Pietro Nenni, the Socialist leader, "how much he hoped that the new coalition government in Italy would be a success and how much opportunity it seemed to offer for useful achievement."

According to Mr. Fraleigh, the Maccounts of the President's delegate to the Paris peace delegate to the Paris peace talks.)

Accounts of the President's domestic programs tended to be more positive than many contemporary evaluations. They came from such labor leaders of Congress, as George Meany and from the Democratic leaders in Congress, including Representative Carl Albert, the House Democratic occast as a skillful politician more inclined to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral and ideological committened to short-run pragmatic solutions than to deep moral temporary evaluations. They will more positive than many contemporary evaluations. They will more positive than many contempor

AsTheySay, It Depends Upon Your Point of View,

A number of interview in the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library's oral-history program disclosed considerable discrepancies in individ-ual recollections of the same event.

Typical of these were interviews with 15 state Democratic leaders on the 1960 West Virginia primary. Each gave his own colorful, less than modest account of how he helped Mr. Kennedy de-feat the then Senator Hubert feat the then Senato.

H. Humphrey.

"That is one of the hazards of oral history," said John E. Stewart, acting director of the library. "When the microphone is there, rector of the library. "When the microphone is there, some people like to take all the credit for victories and blame others for defeat. But then this is the raw material for historians, and when all is sorted out we'll get a pretty good lively picture of what actually happened."