MARSHALL TO REVIEW SURVEILLANCE CASE

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26 — Associate Justice Thurgood Marshall of the United States Supreme Court agreed today to hear arguments on whether the Federal Bureau of Investigation should be barred from monitoring a political convention of young Socialists.

Justice Marshall scheduled oral arguments in his chambers at 11 A.M. tomorrow. The convention of the Young Socialist Alliance is set to open on Saturday in St. Louis.

On Dec. 13 Judge Thomas P. Griesa in Federal District Court in New York issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting the F.B.I. from "attending, surveilling, listening to, watching or otherwise monitoring" the convention.

That decision was overturned Tuesday by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The alliance and its parent Socialist Workers Party appealed to Justice Marshall to reinstate the injunction.

The Socialists had argued that F.B.I. surveillance of their meetings inhibited attendance, impaired their constitutional rights of freedom of association and resulted in information being given to other Federal agencies that then questioned party members about it when they sought Government jobs.
