

Profile of An Assassin

by Our Correspondent

[Story on composite profile of assassins.]

"According to a study by social scientist Conrad V. Hassel of the behavioral science unit of the FBI National Academy in Washington, [the] lone-assassin theory holds value. Hassel says that would-be assassins, from the time of Andrew Jackson, have been deranged, lone individuals, not rational enough to be involved in a conspiracy.

"It is hogwash to believe that these men were part of a conspiracy."
