Washington, Dec. 17 (AP) - Evidence and records compiled by the Warren Commission in its investigation of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy have been deposited with the U.S. Archives, an official said tonight.

Deputy archivist Robert H. Bahmer said it will take some time to identify and classify the huge collection for storage.

Meanwhile, he said, it is expected that the general policy of the government of restricting for 75 years any material assembled by an investigative agency will apply.

It is a matter of federal law, he said, that this restriction can be applied by any agency originating an investigation. In the Warren Commission probe the FBI and some other governmental investigative agencies all had a hand, he noted.

Requests for access to restricted archives material -- by scholars or other interested persons -- may be placed with the proper investigative agency, Bahmer said.

"If they give permission we are happy to make the material available," he said.

At the present time, with the Warren Commission records just having arrived at the archives in recent days, no one can gain access, Bahmer said.

"Even if they (the records) were open, no one could see them because we don't yet know just what we've got," he said. "It will take time to identify them and then the policy as to access can be worked out."

The Warren Commission, headed by Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl Warren and comprising a bipartisan membership, completed its months-long task of investigating the Nov. 22, 1963, fatal shooting of Kennedy only recently.

The Commission's bulky report, including more than a score of printed volumes based on testimony and evidence gathered during the probe, has been made public.
