

'Another' Kennedy Assassin

SF Chron 3 March 1965

New York

A detailed analysis of testimony of 121 witnesses before the commission that investigated President Kennedy's assassination is held to show that 41 people said shots sounded as though they came from a grassy knoll "on the right of the President's car."

This compared with 32 who thought the shots came from the Texas School Book Depository Building behind the President's car, where Le Harvey Oswald was charged with being the lone assassin, and 38 who "could give no clear opinion."

The conclusion offered by Harold Feldman, writing in "The Minority of One" which calls itself an "independent monthly for an American alternative," was that "there was at least one other assassin firing at President Kennedy from the vicinity of the grassy knoll."

In its overall report, the commission asserted there was "no credible evidence that any shots were fired" from a railroad overpass ahead of the Kennedy car or from the area to the west of the book depository.

It said two policemen and 13 railroad employees on the overpass "all affirm that no shots were fired from the overpass." It suggested that m u s s l e blast, shock wave and impact could all sound like shots, and noted that tall buildings could further distort sounds.
