

Chief Justice Warren Burger

We are greatly concerned with a major change which may come over this country as a result of Richard Nixon's appointments.

Which direction will the country take due to Supreme Court decisions? Undoubtedly President Nixon will be able to fill five vacancies during his term(s) as President.

A signpost in that direction can be seen in Nixon's choice of a new Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Warren Burger.

As an assistant attorney general during the Eisenhower administration, Burger was a top witch-hunter for Joe McCarthy and Nixon.

About the only qualification for Warren Burger's appointment: He was a Nixon hand, who has now been rewarded.

Further, it may very well be an indication that Richard Nixon intends to return to the witch-hunting days of the forties. So he is gathering the team -- starting with the Supreme Court. Burger, we feel sure, is not the first to be recalled for action. Nor will he be the last.

We predict the entire Nixon administration will be a giant step backward for the peoples of the world.

The Death of Bert Peck

J. B. (Bert) Peck, 66, Lyndon's "look-alike" cousin is dead, an apparent suicide. That is just too damn much for a fellow to bear: To look like Lyndon - and live.

Bert Peck's troubles started before President Kennedy's assassination. He was fired as a deputy sheriff under Dallas Sheriff Bill Decker. We have always felt the charges against Peck were trumped up. He was accused of indecent exposure to minors. It was charged he approached a school bus and exposed himself.

Following his dismissal, Peck was hired as a security guard for Clint Murchison's Dallas Cowboys.

It is just possible the plotters of the assassination did not want Lyndon's "look-alike" cousin working for the Dallas Sheriff when the President was killed, especially since the President was killed just outside the Sheriff's office window.
