9/25- "Progress" report: Lil got yarn yesterday, but I've keeping her nose at the PM gringstone. She' about halfway through the new part and is rushing because a friend is coming to read it next week. She'll not by any means have it done then, but she wants to spare him as much as possible of my typing and awful handwriting, which often she alone can make out...Post conjectures on China not worth sending. There was an interesting interview on NET last night, Two well-educated young American (he a PhD and she and he speaking Chinese) returned from a month there. They confirm what you have said about the prevalent pride in being Chinese, of the feeling of Chineseness. And universal support for the gov't. They were able to speak to anyone they wanted. Speaking the language, they needed no translator. H
