Js, LF, When I read tonight in this a.m.'s Post that Bremer is out of isolation 8/24/72 and to be "treated like any other prisoner" including mixing, the night after I read what is not withheld of what is found of his diary, I am filled with misgivings. One can't read that without knowing he is dangerously sick. Without his act he is clearly both ~~is~~ capable of violence and anxious for his own death as long as it is accompanied by significant attention. He expected it following an attempted assassination and feared only that he'd not be killed but captured and languish in jail. Can you think of a better combination to make this not-new thought and destiny attractive? I am not urging either of you to want the diary or to take the time to read it. I report a misgiving I can't avoid and a condition not required under law and accepted practise. There is a state institution to which he can be sent on motion, without the existing diagnoses of mental illness. But the state and federal govts won't make that little gesture toward acknowledging the insanity they have long creached is the only explanation of all the assassinations. They are also sick.
