Dear Hal:

The enclosures and those in a companion envelope might as well be on their way, so here they go.

No time to write, and nothing to which I can contribute further in your most interesting 25, 26 and 27, all very meaty.

Most of what we're sending this time is junk, and some is repetitious junk, but we send it along never knowing but that it might contain some crumb that hasn't yet fallen your way. We hope so. We had to go into town one day this weekend, which clobbered one of the two days we can work on this stuff and do other things left to the weekend. We did well to get the copying done.

We've frequently noted your remarks that from the beginning those concerned with the Watergate Caper have appeared desperate. The feeling grows the more the thing progresses, doesn't it? Can't recall so many people all looking so guilty at once. If they were Democrats the media would be in full cry.

More later,

Best,
