

10/3/72 When I saw Guy Johnson in 11/71, I told him it was my info that at least one more government defector would surface in the Gervais-related cases. I added that I had picked up a rumor that his client, Boasberg, was a candidate. He went to some lengths to assure me that this was impossible, and that if I knew Boasberg's background, his family history, I'd know how impossible this was. The clips just received do not support Guy's forceful protests of a year ago. However, the practise of law being what it is, if B turns out to be a state's witness, that is no indictment of Guy, who would have had to lie if he knew this then and who could have had no control if it developed later. To quote a part-time New Orleans old-timer, in New Orleans you can't follow the game with a score card!

Something really weird has to be going on down there. Picture of Gervais worried more about a five-day contempt citation than the other things that could worry him, for example.

And either Ivon remembers to forward a letter to Johnson after about a half-year. Or Guy just gets around to answering it.

I don't recall the anti-trust indictment, but I presume it has to do with interstate pinball-machine business.

Bally high? HW

Got the Sprague-Computers 9/72 today. Nasty trick making it seem that Harper was co-author when all they did is reprint his affidavit and notes that had already appeared elsewhere. Among the insane, Dick is always coming up with new insanities. In this case it includes more than one bullet causing death. And his CIA had located the man who hypnotized Sirhan. Wanna bet? I'll pick Hadley! Thus is all fits into one neat CIA package. Simple solution. Guess we're just not Sherlocks. H
