

Your stories from SR 1/20/73 were in the mailing I picked up before going to DC yesterday. Didn't have a chance to look at until I got to Institute for Policies Studies. While I was waiting I opened and started to read when one on your black woman fellows came up and started to talk. The one by the former Mafioso was relevant to her questions. Perfect timing! I went to carry further my elliptical letter to Raskin and Barnet (who is out of country, I take to mean probably Hanoi). Raskin and others immediately like my idea for the instant book, "If There Is Such a Place", subtitled, "The Official History of the Non-Bombing of Hanoi", with the seal of the US on cover, as with WW books, and authorship attributed to Jerry Friedheim and others who annotate on facing pages, official texts to be left-hand pages. I explained how they could do and some of facing-right pages possible content, and all liked. I had no appointment so there was not much time. We'll probably be meeting again Friday. I think the French Mission could be part. For facing pages, aside from pix and other tests, like Tel Taylor, I've thought of Swedish TV's reporting aired by WS TV nets. Please think of what you can that could be appropriate in case they go for it. Were there not Canadian correspondents who wrote of the mission bombing and later, similar ones, X diplomats who were quited, etc.? One of the disappointments after WW is that the young did not see the possibilities of doing fast books on then unpublishable subjects...Too early for a.m. paper. Radio reporting indicates more significance WG story of Glasshouse Tapes, Tackwood's prior statements of planned police demonstrations at San Diego. Of course, yesterday's testimony is spurious, isn't ITT?
