

This is the envelope of John C. Elliott, whose letterhead doesn't indicate if he is a lawyer, zombie or just richie. His name and address are all it bears. His secretary, Mrs. Joanne C. Gates, seems to assume that I'll know who he is, beginning the letter for him, "Mr. Elliott has asked me to obtain your latest book...article in the Los Angeles Times on November 23, 1974. I have been unable to locate this in any of our local bookstores." However, I am additionally interested because she has my full and correct address, which the LATimes did not carry. If she had gotten my address from a bookstore, it also could have obtained the book for him, so I don't think that happened and the phone company no longer gives addresses. However, if it did, we are not so listed in the directory or by information. Does his name mean anything to you? HW 1/10/75
