

Dear Jim,

11/1/78

This is an experiment, to try out my Hermes Rocket and see how it works when I use it on the desk, higher than a typing table.

I've not yet read the instruction book but will after getting a bit of the feel.

There is an irony. While I was awaiting Lil's return from Washington with this I was visited by a neighbor, professor at a local college. As we talked I told him I expected this machine. "Why didn't you tell me?" he asked. "I have one I never use since I got my IBM electric."

It turns out that he has the post-war miniature version, the one you said is not as good as the earlier subcompact.

Lil had a ride, available locally for those over 60 for medical appointments. The driver went into the Bethesda typewriter store, which I'd found out by telephoning last time I was in Washington had these in stock. Nice guy, going to save her the carrying. He and I chatted a bit when he handed the machine to me. Part of his conversation was "I didn't know they made typewriters in Brazil."

They appear to make them without margin release or tab keys, too. And they crawl like the Swiss Hermes does, too.

I won't be chipping the paint when I removed the cover. This one is solid plastic, color all the way through, I guess.

There is no special selection in the reverse side of this paper. We have copies that are not clear enough to use with affidavits and the service man runs copies when he services the machine. Instead of burning them I use the clean sides for rough drafts, etc. It just happens that this is a sheet from an exhibit I used to address the FBI's deep and genuine concern for privacy. In this case Marina's

This isn't much of a machine but I can use it better than the old Royal portable, which needs a part no longer available.

I hope the instructions show a secret hiding place for a tab!

Best,
